A Christian Tradition

Throughout human history, people have been concerned about their final resting place after their death. It is a Common desire to be buried near family and friends to be held in lasting and loving remembrance.

For much of church history, the preferred place of burial was within the church itself where the faithful gathered for worship and prayer.

As space in the church became less available, the churchyard cemetery developed. In more modern times, burial grounds outside the church property and far removed from centers of community life and prayer have become the norm.

In ancient times and in Christian tradition the dual tradition of burial and cremation were preserved.

In recent years, consideration of the spiritual and practical aspects of cremation and burial in the church has revived the practice of cremation and burial in the church. Interning our loved ones in our Church's Columbarium allows us to honor and remember them and have their remains near faithful worshippers.
